Unlocalized pathways

- Unlocalized content is content on the HealthPathways platform that has not yet been adapted for our local healthcare system context by our local program team.
- Unlocalized pages are clearly marked on our website, and this is explained in the “How to Use HealthPathways” section.
- Unlocalized content is sourced from a limited number of other member regions in the international HealthPathways community. The content is clinically correct and has been approved by the source region's clinical governance process.
- While unlocalized content is clinically safe to use, it might not work specifically for our healthcare system. In particular, unlocalized content does not typically contain request or referral information from our region. However, where unlocalized content pages link to other pages on the site, users can click through to view localized content if available.
- Users of HealthPathways should consider local protocols and use their clinical judgement when using unlocalized content.
